

GUIDELINES FOR ITPEDIA ARTICLES

If you want to participate in ITpedia as an author, you can. However, ITpedia does state a number of conditions to the articles before they are included. Therefore, keep the following in mind:

1. Write legible language. Dutch and English are allowed.
2. Offensive articles will be refused. No violence, no sex, no name-calling.
3. Articles that clearly advertise a company, product, or service are refused. Explanation about products and services is allowed if they are informative.
4. The article contains 750 – 3000 words. Cut an article that is too large into several articles.
5. Write neuter. ITpedia is an encyclopedia, not a blog. So no adventures with yourself as the main character.
6. Keep it factual, no guesses, lies, or half-truths. Be informative.
7. Keep it general, not for a specific organization, but applicable to everyone.
8. Legal photos, diagrams, and other materials are most welcome. They serve outside the document in the same email to be delivered.
9. Copyright. Don't plagiarize, be original. If you include texts from others in your article record, cite the source.

BENEFITS FOR AUTHORS

1. The author gets his own page on which he/she can introduce himself. Provide a short text. Possibly with website and accessibility information.
2. The name of the author is mentioned in the article with a link to the author's page.
3. 1 external link is allowed in the article.
4. The article may be an extensive summary of an article on your own website referenced by a link.
5. Thanks to the large number of visitors to ITpedia, a topic gets more attention than on company websites. So, an article on ITpedia can be used as a landing page for a topic.
